If a client receives a vague invoice with next to no information present, this could open your firm up to disputes that cost your firm both its time and hard-earned reputation. On the other hand, when you present invoices that clearly outline billable hours and expenditures, your clients won't have an issue when it's time to sign on the dotted line.

You can also use your invoice to encourage cash-flow-generating payment options, like online payments or automatic payments. Add a link to your payment portal or client portal so they can quickly settle their bills—and you can get paid for your hard work.
