Eagan, MN May 30, 2017 – TimeSolv, a leading provider of web-based software for legal billing and timekeeping announces several document management solutions as the software moves to providing more practice management features.

TimeSolv now has three document management solutions for law firms to choose from, including integrations with two of the most popular platforms, NetDocuments and Dropbox. TimeSolv has also built a native document management feature within the application hosted on the same servers as their billing and timekeeping data.

“With our own document management solution as well as our integrations with NetDocuments and TimeSolv, firms can use our software as a hub for managing their client’s files, bills and reports,” stated TimeSolv CEO Raza Hasan.

When law firms create new clients and matters within TimeSolv, a corresponding folder structure is automatically created for any of the three solutions a firm chooses. “Many firms have been using NetDocuments or Dropbox for years to manage their files in the cloud while also using TimeSolv’s robust billing and timekeeping features. Now these systems work in concert together, making firms more efficient,” says Hasan.

Hasan continues, “And with our own document management solution, new firms or firms that have never considered storing their files in the cloud can leverage our new internal service.”

The new document management features are part of a broader strategy for TimeSolv to expand upon its robust billing and timekeeping software, proven since 1999. The next several months will see TimeSolv releasing document automation, task management and email integration within the application.

“Billing and timekeeping are often the most complex part of practice management software because there are so many moving parts and intricacies,” said Hasan. “We have many firms who moved from other web-based practice management software to TimeSolv because we’re solely focused on getting right the most important part of a law firm’s business, their billing! Now, we can build upon our core strength to offer the essential practice management solutions that firms will actually use, like document management, task management and integrations with their already existing email and calendar systems.”
